Abstract

The present inventory includes references to Canadian Illustrated News, L'Opinion publique and Portfolio and Dominion Guide (1873) for all matters concerning architecture in Canada (with the exception of bridges). A reference may relate to a text or an illustration, or both. The content referred to may vary from a few details (owner, dates) or an illustration to the detailed description of the interior or exterior of a building with one or more illustrations.

We have not indexed general views of towns or villages (unless certain buildings are identified), advertisement containing only the names and addresses of establishments, unlocalized and unidentified sketches, or fictitious structures.

The inventory is preceeded by a short study of each of the periodicals and by a few notes on their architectural content.

Sommaire

Le présent inventaire comprend des références au Canadian Illustrated News, à L'Opinion publique et au Portfolio and Dominion Guide 1873 pour tout ce qui concerne l'architecture au Canada (à l'exception des ponts). Une référence peut diriger vers un texte ou une illustration ou les deux. Le contenu auquel on réfère va de quelques détails (propriétaire, dates) ou d'une illustration à la description détaillée de l'intérieur et de l'extérieur d'un édifice avec une ou plusieurs illustrations.

Nous n'avons pas indexé les vues d'ensemble de villes ou villages (sauf si certains bâtiments sont identifiés), ni les annonces ne contenant que les noms et adresses des établissements, des esquisses non localisées et non identifiées, ou des structures fictives.
L'inventaire est précédé d'une courte étude de chacun des périodiques et de quelques notes sur leur contenu en architecture.

Methodology

1. Classification and methodology of references

The references are classified in alphabetical order of place (province in parentheses) within which the chronological order of publication and pages has been respected. Three other sections complete the classification by place: location by province only, location unknown and miscellaneous. An appendix also including references by place-name supplements the initial classification by place. Each reference is given an entry number.

Because of the diversity and quantity of the information collected from these two periodicals, it was impossible to list it all in an inventory in a standardized form and the researcher must consult the source document to complete the data given in the inventory. However, certain items of information could be easily standardized: in the reference, we have therefore indicated the following: the name of the building or structure, the address, the dates relating to its construction, whether the interior or exterior is mentioned and the names of those involved (occupations related to the architecture and the owners). All this information is given to the researcher in its original state.

Certain texts and illustrations may be indexed several times if the buildings concerned are identified by different names or if these texts and illustrations are presented in different contexts.

The references consist of two parts: the container and the contents.

Not all references (the container or contents part) necessarily contain all the above-mentioned information, but only those items available in the source, with no interpretation.

Container

Basic data:
Title of the periodical, volume (date), page (author of the text); illustration(s) (number of illustrations) (author of the illustration).
E.g.: Reference 3.

Méthodologie

1. Classement et méthodologie des références

Les références sont classées par ordre alphabétique de lieu (province entre parenthèses) à l'intérieur duquel on a respecté l'ordre chronologique de publication, puis les pages. Trois autres sections complètent le classement par lieu: localisation par province seulement, localisation inconnue et divers. Une annexe comprenant aussi des références par toponymes s'ajoute au classement initial par lieu. Chaque référence reçoit un numéro d'entrée.

À cause de la diversité et de la quantité des renseignements recueillis dans ces deux périodiques, il était impossible de les consigner tous de façon normalisée dans un inventaire, et le chercheur devra retourner à la source pour compléter l'information reçue dans l'inventaire. Cependant, certaines données se prêtaient bien à une inscription normalisée; voici donc ce que nous avons retenu d'indiquer dans la référence: le nom du bâtiment ou structure, l'adresse, les dates concernant la construction, la mention concernant l'intérieur ou l'extérieur et les noms des intervenants (métiers reliés à l'architecture et propriétaires). Toutes ces données sont offertes au chercheur à l'état brut.

Certains textes et illustrations peuvent être indexés plusieurs fois si les structures concernées sont identifiées par des noms différents ou si ces textes et illustrations sont présentés dans des ensembles différents.

Les références sont composées de deux parties: contenant et contenu.

Chacune des références (contenant et contenu) ne renferme pas nécessairement toutes les données dont il est question ici, mais seulement les données disponibles dans la source, sans aucune interprétation.

2. Notes concerning proper names

The proper names of persons and buildings (or other structures) are always transcribed as they appeared in the source except for names including the word "Saint", this always being spelled out in full, both in English and French. The same building may therefore be listed in the index and in the references under several different names (English and French).

To avoid repetitions and confusion, placenames are listed in their official version, regardless of the periodical cited.

3. Index

General index including:
names of buildings or other structures (place)
names of participants (occupation or function) names of authors of texts and illustrations

Exemple: référence 3.
Description commençant par l'énoncé d'un sujet:
Uniquement pour une référence à la section "Divers".
Exemple: référence 1220.
Extérieur et intérieur:
Ces mentions concernent les illustrations seulement bien que plusieurs textes décrivent des intérieurs. L'absence d'indications annonce une vue de l'extérieur.
Intervenants:
Personnes exerçant des métiers reliés à la construction et propriétaires.
Langue utilisée:
Langue du périodique cité ou périodique publié en premier si on réfère aux deux.
Exemple: référence 2.

Données supplémentaires:
La mention "ill.":
La mention "ill." est utilisée dans la partie contenu pour indiquer quelles sont les structures illustrées.
Exemple: référence 8.

2. Note concernant les noms propres

Les noms propres de personnes et d'édifices (ou autres structures) sont toujours transcrits tels qu'ils étaient dans la source sauf les noms comprenant le mot "Saint", celui-ci étant toujours utilisé dans sa forme complète, en anglais comme en français. Le même édifice peut donc être inscrit à l'index et dans les références sous plusieurs vocables différents (anglais et français).

Pour éviter les répétitions et la confusion, les toponymes sont inscrits dans leur version officielle sans tenir compte du périodique cité.

3. Index

Index général comprenant:
noms des bâtiments ou autres structures (lieu) noms des intervenants (métier ou fonction)
noms des auteurs de textes et d'illustrations

Canadian Illustrated News

The Canadian Illustrated News was a 16-page illustrated weekly published in Montreal on Saturdays, from October 30, 1869 to December 29, 1883. The magazine sold for 10¢ a copy or $4.00 for year's subscription.[1] Six thousand copies were printed of the first issue which was distributed all over the country free of charge; the public was invited to subscribe with the prospect of receiving the forthcoming 1869 issues free of charge. In the first issue, it was stated that advertising rates would not change until the circulation reached 10,000 copies. We have no further information concerning the numbers of copies printed.[2]

The founder of the Canadian Illustrated News was Georges-É. Desbarats, a descendant of a family of printers and publishers, both in Canada and Europe. The owners of the Canadian Illustrated News were Georges-É. Desbarats from October 30, 1869 to December 27, 1873; The Desbarats Lithographic and Publishing Company from January 3 to October 10, 1874; The Burland-Desbarats Lithographic and Publishing Company from October 17, 1874 to November 8, 1879; and The Burland Lithographic Company Ltd from November 15, 1879 to December 29, 1883.[3] The last editorial justifies the closing of the periodical as follows: "the Illustrated News is discontinued for the simple reason that its issue is not remunerative to the company who publish it."[4]

In 1885, Georges-É. Desbarats launched another illustrated weekly, the Dominion Illustrated which took over from the Canadian Illustrated News until 1895; it became a monthly, however, during the last few years (Dominion Monthly Illustrated).

The Canadian Illustrated News was in fact the second periodical of that name, the first having been published in Hamilton (then Toronto) from November 1862 to February 1864.[5]

Several Canadian libraries hold numbers of the Canadian Illustrated News and the complete collection is available on microfilm at the National Library of Canada in Ottawa (among other institutions).[6]

The Canadian Illustrated News described itself as: "A weekly journal of current events,

Le Canadian Illustrated News

Le Canadian Illustrated News est un hebdomadaire illustré de seize pages publié le samedi à Montréal, du 30 octobre 1869 au 29 décembre 1883. Le magazine se vendait 0,10 $ la copie ou 4,00 $ pour un abonnement d'un an[1]. Le premier numéro a été tiré à 6000 exemplaires et distribué gratuitement à travers le pays; on y invitait la population à s'abonner en offrant gratuitement les numéros à paraître en 1869. Dans le premier numéro, on indique que le tarif des annonces ne changera pas tant que le tirage n'aura pas atteint 10 000 exemplaires. Nous n'avons pas d'autres données concernant le tirage[2].

Le fondateur du Canadian Illustrated News fut Georges-É. Desbarats, descendant d'une famille d'imprimeurs et d'éditeurs, tant au Canada qu'en Europe. Les propriétaires du Canadian Illustrated News furent: Georges-É. Desbarats, du 30 octobre 1869 au 27 décembre 1873; The Desbarats Lithographic and Publishing Company, du 3 janvier au 10 octobre 1874; The Burland-Desbarats Lithographic and Publishing Company, du 17 octobre 1874 au 8 novembre 1879; et The Burland Lithographic Company Ltd, du 15 novembre 1879 au 29 décembre 1883[3]. Le dernier éditorial justifie ainsi la disparition du périodique: "the Illustrated News is discontinued for the simple reason that its issue is not remunerative to the company who publish it"[4].

En 1885, Georges-É. Desbarats lance un autre hebdomadaire illustré, le Dominion Illustrated qui assurera la succession du Canadian Illustrated News jusqu'en 1895; il deviendra cependant un mensuel au cours des dernières années (Dominion Monthly Illustrated).

Le Canadian Illustrated News était en fait le second périodique de ce nom, le premier avait été publié à Hamilton (puis Toronto) de novembre 1862 à février 1864[5].

Plusieurs bibliothèques canadiennes conservent des numéros du Canadian Illustrated News et la collection complète est disponible sur microfilm à la Bibliothèque nationale du Canada à Ottawa (entre autres)[6].

Le Canadian Illustrated News se décrit comme: "A weekly journal of currents events, Literature, Science and Art, Agriculture and Mechanics, Fashions and Amusement". Cette Literature, Science and Art, Agriculture and Mechanics, Fashions and Amusement." This short description used in the paragraph listing the features of the periodical already announced the goals of the magazine. Desbarats completed the description in his first editorial:[7]

> A Canadian illustrated paper would be as it were a mirror that would reflect Canadian nature enterprise and art throughout the world, and tell the multitudes who crowd the cities and hamlets of Europe how much Providence has done for us, what our energy is adding to nature's ample store and what a promising field lies open to their capital and industry. Such a paper will also bring to the notice of our neighbours the rapid strides we are making in arts and manufacture. Through it tourists would be made acquainted with the beauty of our summer resorts, and the wild grandeur of our scenery.[8]

The goals are ambitious: the magazine wishes to show the nature and progress of the country, attract tourists and, above all, sets its sights on an international circulation. The editorial also indicates the wish to arouse nationalist feelings:

> By picturing to our own people the broad dominion they possess, its resources and progress, its monuments and industry, its great men and great events, such a paper would teach them to know and love it better, and by it they will learn to feel still prouder of the proud Canadian name.[9]

Also in the first editorial, the Canadian Illustrated News compares itself to the American Harper's Weekly, the British Illustrated London News and the French Monde illustré; this comparison proved correct and has been acknowledged by most of the authors who have analyzed the magazine. Indeed, as far as the written contents is concerned, the Canadian Illustrated News was very similar to these great illustrated periodicals but, as regards illustrations, it outshone them all.

This 16-page family weekly, at least seven pages of which consisted of illustrations, had articles on the arts, sciences, sports, agricultural innovations and machinery, trade and fashion, summaries of European and American news, news of the week from each province, a parliamentary report from the provincial and federal legislatures, and a humorous column.

courte description utilisée dans l'entrefilet qui donne les caractéristiques du périodique annonce déjà les objectifs du magazine. Desbarats complète dans son premier éditorial[7]:

> A Canadian illustrated paper would be as it were a mirror that would reflect Canadian nature enterprise and art throughout the world, and tell the multitudes who crowd the cities and hamlets of Europe how much Providence has done for us, what our energy is adding to nature's ample store and what a promising field lies open to their capital and industry. Such a paper will also bring to the notice of our neighbours the rapid strides we are making in arts and manufacture. Through it tourists would be made acquainted with the beauty of our summer resorts, and the wild grandeur of our scenery[8].

Les objectifs sont ambitieux: le magazine désire montrer la nature et le progrès du pays, attirer les touristes et, surtout, il vise à une diffusion dans d'autres pays. L'éditorial démontre aussi le désir d'attiser le sentiment nationaliste:

> By picturing to our own people the broad dominion they possess, its resources and progress, its monuments and industry, its great men and great events, such a paper would teach them to know and love it better, and by it they will learn to feel still prouder of the proud Canadian name.[9]

Toujours dans le premier éditorial, le Canadian Illustrated News se compare au Harper's Weekly américain, au Illustrated London News anglais et au Monde illustré français; cette comparaison s'avère juste et sera reprise par la plupart des auteurs qui l'ont analysé. En fait, sur le plan du contenu écrit, le Canadian Illustrated news s'associe bien à ces grands périodiques illustrés, mais sur le plan de l'illustration, il les surpassera tous.

L'hebdomadaire de famille de seize pages, dont au moins sept illustrations, aura des reportages sur les arts, les sciences, les sports, les nouveautés agricoles et la machinerie, le commerce et la mode, des résumés des nouvelles d'Europe et d'Amérique, les nouvelles de la semaine pour chaque province, une chronique sur l'activité des législatures provinciales et fédérale et une chronique humoristique. De plus le magazine publiera des poèmes et des récits et se fera à l'occasion

In addition, the magazine published poems and stories, and, from time to time, literary, music and theatrical reviews. A portrait gallery presenting the country's outstanding personalities was also featured and engravings that could be torn out and framed were regularly published.[10]

Desbarats tried to please everyone and appealed to all classes of society to encourage him in his project; however, the Canadian Illustrated News would very quickly forget to illustrate the life of workers and the poor and to discuss their problems. The editor-founder also aimed at great objectivity: "the reading matter will consist of a leading article on the most interesting questions of the day, from a Canadian point of view, high toned and thoroughly independent."[11]

Desbarats was addressing an élite and did not wish to importune them with the seamy side of society. From a glance at the pages of the Canadian Illustrated News, it might be thought that there were no social problems in the country, only a few pictures and certain editorials alluding to poverty. Peter Desbarats, who has analyzed the contents of the magazine, reproaches it with its lack of social conscience and notes that although several editorials expressed indignation concerning the problems of the poor, readers did not appreciate: "When two children froze to death overnight on the floor of a poor family's shanty in Montreal, it was a two week scandal."[12]

The contents of the Canadian Illustrated News showed little originality in comparison with the other periodicals of its day and its importance in the history of communications is due to its illustrations:

> The late 1860s were dominated by the appearance in Montreal of a new Canadian Illustrated News and its French-language counterpart L'Opinion publique, while in London and New York at that time, printers were hotly competing to develop a process that would mechanically produce the effect of photographs, the cover illustration of the first issue in October 1869 of the Canadian Illustrated News achieved a close approximation.[13]

Georges-É. Desbarats and William Leggo (the engraver working for the Canadian Illustrated News) were the first in the world to illustrate a paper by means of lithography, critique littéraire, musical ou dramatique. Une galerie de portraits présentant les personnages en vue du pays sera aussi élaborée et des gravures détachables qu'on pourra encadrer paraîtront régulièrement[10].

Desbarats cherche à plaire à tous et fait appel à toutes les classes de la société pour l'encourager dans son projet; cependant, le Canadian Illustrated News oubliera bien facilement d'illustrer la vie des ouvriers et des classes pauvres et de discuter de leurs problèmes. Le rédacteur fondateur se propose de faire preuve de grande objectivité: "the reading matter will consist of a leading article on the most interesting questions of the day, from a Canadian point of view, high toned and thoroughly independant"[11].

Desbarats s'adresse à une élite et ne veut pas les importuner avec ce qui ne va pas bien dans la société. À feuilleter le Canadian Illustrated News on peut penser qu'il n'y avait pas de problèmes sociaux au pays, seules quelques images et quelques éditoriaux faisant état de la misère. Peter Desbarats, qui a analysé le contenu du magazine, lui reproche son manque de conscience sociale et rapporte que si quelques éditoriaux se penchaient avec indignation sur les problèmes des pauvres, les lecteurs n'appréciaient pas: "When two children froze to death overnight on the floor of a poor family's shanty in Montreal, it was a two week scandal"[12].

Le contenu du Canadian Illustrated News ne présente pas beaucoup d'originalité par rapport aux autres périodiques de son époque, mais c'est à ses illustrations qu'il doit son importance dans l'histoire des communications:

> The late 1860's were dominated by the appearance in Montreal of a new Canadian Illustrated News and its French-language counterpart L'Opinion publique, while in London and New York at that time, printers were hotly competing to develop a process that would mechanically produce the effect of photographs, the cover illustration of the first issue in October 1869 of the Canadian Illustrated News achieved a close approximation.[13]

Georges-É. Desbarats et William Leggo (le graveur à l'emploi du Canadian Illustrated News) seront les premiers au monde à illustrer un journal avec le procédé de la lithographie, grâce à une technique appelé "leggotype", une invention de Wiliam Leggo[14].

thanks to a technique called "Leggotype," an invention of William Leggo.[14]

Georges-É. Desbarats began his first editorial in 1869 by addressing his readers on the value of illustrations; he seems to have already entered the "image era" and firmly believes in its educational force:

> the imagination is so closely linked to the perspective faculties, that the speediest and surest way of reaching the mind and impressing thereon facts and objects, is to lay them vividly before the eye (that main feeder of the imagination) either in their reality, or in the drama, or even through their image pointed or engraved.[15]

Desbarats used pictures to show the majesty of nature in Canada, great architectural achievements, historical monuments, factories, and great events. The editorial of the first issue indicated Desbarat's confidence in Leggo's new methods:

> at least seven pages will be handsomely illustrated by the beautiful and wonderful process of Leggotype, which being in result the transformation of a photograph into a relief engraving by purely chemical appliances, ensures accuracy as well as beauty of effect.[16]
> As already stated, our conviction that the news will prove a success, rests upon our faith in the new art by which it will be illustrated and in the generous spirit of the Canadian People.[17]

Georges-É. Desbarats commençait en 1869 son premier éditorial en entretenant ses lecteurs sur la valeur des illustrations; il semble alors déjà entré dans "la civilisation de l'image" et croit fermement à la force éducative de celle-ci:

> the imagination is so closely linked to the perspective faculties, that the speediest and surest way of reaching the mind and impressing thereon facts and objects, is to lay them vividly before the eye (that main feeder of the imagination) either in their reality, or in the drama, or even through their image pointed or engraved.[15]

> at least seven pages will be handsomely illustrated by the beautiful and wonderful process of Leggotype, which being in result the transformation of photograph into a relief engraving by purely chemical appliances, ensures accuracy as well as beauty of effect.[16]
> As already stated, our conviction that the news will prove a success, rests upon our faith in the new art by which it will be illustrated and in the generous spirit of the Canadian People.[17]

L'Opinion publique

L'Opinion publique, the first French-Canadian illustrated paper, was published in Montreal on Saturdays, from January 1st, 1870 to December 29, 1883. The magazine had eight pages to start with, twelve in 1871 and sixteen from 1875 onwards. It sold for six cents a copy and an annual subscription could be had for $2.50 in Canada and $3.00 in the United States.[1] The first issue, of which 5,200 copies were printed (a run of 12,000 copies would be reached in 1874), had been sent free of charge to many people in the towns and villages of the province of Quebec. The first issues of L'Opinion publique show either an aggressive marketing approach or a certain uneasiness on the part of the owners; indeed, the first two issues were offered and sent free of charge with the following notice: "All those not returning the paper will be considered as subscribers."[2]

The founders of the paper were Georges-Édouard Desbarats, Joseph-Alfred Mousseau and Laurent-Olivier David. L'Opinion publique was successively owned by the following: Georges-É. Desbarats from 1870 to 1874, The Burland Lithographic Company from 1874 to 1880, a group of French-Canadians headed by Alfred Duclos-Decelles in 1880 and Paul Dumas from 1880 to 1883. The printers and publishers were the same as for Canadian Illustrated News (Desbarats, Burland-Desbarats and Burland). The editors were Laurent-Olivier David in 1870 and 1871, Oscar Dunn from 1872 to 1874, Auguste Achintre in 1875 and 1876, and Alfred Duclos-Decelles from 1880 to 1882.[3] L'Opinion publique published its last issue at the same time as the Canadian Illustrated News, to be replaced in French-Canada by the Monde illustré (1884-1902), then L'Album universel (1902-1907). Another review called L'Opinion publique was published in Montreal in 1892-1893 by Louis-Hippolyte Taché. With no illustrations and no connection with L'Opinion publique of 1870-1883, it was a periodical which aimed to provide a forum for free discussion for French-Canadian writers and politicians. Many libraries in Quebec and the rest of Canada hold collections of L'Opinion publique, the most complete being that of the library of the Assemblée nationale in Quebec City.[4]

L'Opinion publique

L'Opinion publique, premier journal illustré canadien-français, fut publié chaque samedi à Montréal, du 1er janvier 1870 au 29 décembre 1883. Le magazine avait huit pages au début, douze en 1871 et seize à partir de 1875. La revue se vendait six sous le numéro et on pouvait obtenir un abonnement d'un an pour 2,50 $ au Canada et 3,00 $ aux États-Unis[1]. Le premier numéro, tiré à 5200 exemplaires (le tirage atteindra 12 000 en 1874) avait été envoyé gratuitement à plusieurs personnes dans les villes et les villages de la province de Québec. Les premiers numéros de L'Opinion publique démontrent soit une technique agressive de marketing, soit une certaine inquiétude de la part des propriétaires; en effets, les deux premiers numéros étaient offerts et expédiés gratuitement avec l'avis suivant: "Tous ceux qui ne renverront pas le journal seront considérés comme abonnés"[2].

Les fondateurs du journal sont Georges-Édouard Desbarats, Joseph-Alfred Mousseau et Laurent-Olivier David. L'Opinion publique a eu pour propriétaires Georges-É. Desbarats de 1870 à 1874, The Burland Lithographic Company de 1874 à 1880, un groupe de canadiens français dirigés par Alfred Duclos-Decelles en 1880 et Paul Dumas de 1880 à 1883. Les éditeurs imprimeurs étaient les mêmes que pour le Canadian Illustrated News (Desbarats, Burland-Desbarats et Burland). Les rédacteurs furent Laurent-Olivier David en 1870 et 1871, Oscar Dunn de 1872 à 1874, Auguste Achintre en 1875 et 1876, et Alfred Duclos-Decelles de 1880 à 1882[3]. L'Opinion publique publiera son dernier numéro en même temps que celui du Canadian Illustrated News. Le Monde illustré (1884-1902) puis L'Album universel (1902-1907) remplaceront L'Opinion publique au Canada français. Une autre revue appelée L'Opinion publique sera publiée à Montréal en 1892-1893 par Louis-Hyppolyte Taché. Non illustré et sans rapport avec L'Opinion publique de 1870-1883, c'est un périodique qui se veut une tribune libre pour les écrivains et les politiciens canadiens-français. Des collections de L'Opinion publique sont conservées dans plusieurs bibliothèques au Québec et au Canada, la plus complète étant celle de la bibliothèque de l'Assemblée nationale à Québec[4].

L'Opinion publique introduced itself as a "political and literary paper." In the first editorial, signed by the three founders, Desbarats, Mousseau and David, the spirit adopted and the goals pursued are clearly expressed: "This will be an essentially political and literary paper. We do not intend to make it a party paper in the sense generally accepted before Confederation."[5] The three founders believe that: "The level of politics, in shifting, will be considerably raised; there will be little or no question of personalities, who will give way to principles."[6] Yet L'Opinion publique was very quickly to adopt a "nationalist" tone, to identify itself politically and have difficulty in maintaining the neutrality it had announced.[7]

More particularly, the magazine wished to keep its readers abreast of political events, to publish reports and studies on the future of the working and agricultural classes, new industries, reforms with regard to agriculture and colonization, measures to prevent immigration, education and, lastly, to publish the works of Canadian writers. Although the authors of the introduction announce their wish to write in-depth articles on society and its major problems, much of the magazine would be devoted to illustrations featuring, among other subjects, fashions, architecture, landscapes, animals, illustrations of social events, and portraits of famous people. Serialized novels or stories, which were not always of a high literary standard, were also included.

L'Opinion publique has often been presented as the French version of Canadian Illustrated News, yet the written contents of the two periodicals were different, as was the general tone. For instance, Canadian Illustrated News had invited the public to subscribe to ensure the paper's success and thus provide themselves with an educational tool, stressing the merits of the new illustration techniques and promising great variety, all on a note of sollicitation which left readers free to subscribe or not. L'Opinion publique, on the other had, after publishing a justification of the new paper signed by Louis-Olivier David, harangued -indeed, almost abused - eventual readers, still under David's signature, because of their indifference to "cultural" and literary reviews, and reading in general. A curious way of winning customers' good will.

L'Opinion publique se présente comme un "journal politique et littéraire". Dans le premier éditorial, signé par les trois fondateurs, Desbarats, Mousseau et David, l'esprit adopté et les objectifs poursuivis sont exprimés clairement: "Ce sera une revue essentiellement politique et littéraire. Nous n'entendons pas faire un journal de parti dans le sens généralement admis avant la Confédération"[5]. Les trois fondateurs croient que: "Le niveau de la politique en se déplaçant s'élèvera considérablement; on ne s'occupera que peu ou point des hommes, qui s'effaceront devant les principes"[6]. Pourtant, L'Opinion publique adoptera bien vite un ton "nationaliste", s'identifiera politiquement et aura de la difficulté à maintenir la neutralité qu'elle s'était proposée[7].

Plus précisément, le magazine désire informer des événements politiques, publier des reportages et des études sur l'avenir des classes ouvrières et agricoles, sur les industries naissantes, sur les nouveautés dans les domaines de l'agriculture et de la colonisation, sur les mesures pour empêcher l'immigration, sur l'éducation et enfin publier des oeuvres d'écrivains canadiens. Bien que les auteurs de la présentation manifestent le désir de faire des articles de fond sur la société et ses grands problèmes, une bonne partie du magazine sera consacrée aux illustrations, et on y retrouvera mode, architecture, paysages, animaux, vie mondaine, et portraits de personnages célèbres. On pourra aussi y lire des feuilletons ou récits qui ne seront pas toujours de la grande littérature.

On présente généralement L'Opinion publique comme la version française du Canadian Illustrated News, pourtant le contenu écrit des deux périodiques était différent, de même que le ton en général. Par exemple, le Canadian Illustrated News avait invité la population à s'abonner pour assurer le succès du journal et ainsi doter la population d'un instrument d'éducation, en faisant valoir les mérites des nouvelles techniques d'illustration et en promettant beaucoup de variétés, le tout sur un ton de sollicitation qui laissait aux lecteurs la possibilité de s'abonner ou non. L'Opinion publique, au contraire, après avoir publié une apologie du nouveau journal signée Louis-Olivier David, haranguait, invectivait presque les éventuels lecteurs, toujours sous la plume de David, à propos de leur indifférence

The illustrations and accompanying texts were in fact the main connection between the two periodicals. Peter Desbarats accurately sums up the situation:

> L'opinion used illustrations from the Canadian Illustrated but under its editors, L.-O. David and J.-A. Mousseau, it was far from being a mere translation of the English-Language magazine. Its editorials were originals, its foreign reports were taken mainly from French publications and its literary materials was supplied by French and Quebec writers.[8]

L'Opinion publique also benefitted from the most up-to-date illustrative techniques invented by William Leggo, a fact which was not unrelated to its success. The same criticisms made of Canadian Illustrated News could basically be made of L'Opinion, namely of merely addressing itself to an élite and overlooking many facets of Canadian life.

In addition to its problems of political identification, the decline of L'Opinion publique was due to the same reasons as that of Canadian Illustrated News: a lack of Canadian content and a deterioration in the general quality of the magazine.

vis-à-vis les revues "culturelles" et littéraires, et la lecture en général. Curieuse façon de s'attirer la sympathie des clients.

En fait, les illustrations et les textes qui les accompagnent sont le principal lien entre les deux périodiques. Peter Desbarats résume bien:

> L'Opinion used illustrations from the Canadian Illustrated but under it's editors, L.-O. David and J.-A. Mousseau, it was far from being a mere translation of the English-Language magazine. Its editorials were originals, its foreign reports were taken mainly from French publications and its litterary material was supplied by French and Quebec writers.[8]

L'Opinion publique bénéficiait aussi des plus récentes techniques d'illustration découvertes par William Leggo et ce fait n'est pas étranger à son succès. Sur le plan du fond on pourrait faire à L'Opinion les mêmes reproches qu'on a faits au Canadian Illustrated News, c'est-à-dire de s'adresser seulement à l'élite et d'oublier plusieurs réalités canadiennes.

En plus de ses problèmes d'identification politique, le déclin de l'Opinion publique sera dû aux mêmes raisons que le Canadian Illustrated News: manque de contenu canadien et baisse dans la qualité générale de la revue.

Portfolio and Dominion Guide

The Portfolio and Dominion Guide, as its name suggests, was a sort of illustrated guide published for tourists, commercial travellers, or immigrants as well as for the general public. It was distributed in Canada and abroad in hotels, boats, trains, reading rooms and libraries.

It contains descriptions and illustrations of Canada. The guide was published by the Canadian Illustrated News and probably distributed with it. We have only found one copy of the Dominion Guide, that of 1873, in which the issue of Canadian Illustrated News of May 24, 1873 was inserted. The 1873 Dominion Guide is available at (among other places) the National Library of Canada (Ottawa), the library of the Assemblée nationale (Quebec City) and in the salle Gagnon of the Montreal Municipal Library.

The introduction tells us that the guide was published for the first time in 1872 and that it was a success; the company therefore wishes to continue publishing it. The 1872 edition gives a description of Canadian cities, that of 1873 features the history of colonization and resources, articles on the various forms of government and public institutions, and the forthcoming issue (1874?) was to present the country's factories, industries and inventions. Since the only issue we have found (up till now) contained several previously unpublished illustrations, we decided to index it in this inventory.

Le Portfolio and Dominion Guide

Le Portfolio and Dominion Guide, comme son nom l'indique est une sorte de guide illustré destiné autant au touriste, au voyageur de commerce, à l'immigrant qu'au simple citoyen; il était distribué au Canada et à l'étranger dans les hôtels, les bateaux, les trains, les salles de lecture et les bibliothèques.

On y trouve des descriptions et des illustrations du Canada. Le guide était publié par le Canadian Illustrated News et probablement distribué en même temps. Nous n'avons retrouvé qu'un seul Dominion Guide, celui de 1873, dans lequel était inséré le numéro du Canadian Illustrated News du 24 mai 1873. Le Dominion Guide de 1873 est disponible (entre autres) à la Bibliothèque nationale du Canada (Ottawa), à la bibliothèque de l'Assemblée nationale (Québec) et à la salle Gagnon de la bibliothèque municipale de Montréal.

L'introduction nous apprend que le guide a été publié pour la première fois en 1872 et qu'il a obtenu du succès; la compagnie désire alors continuer la publication. L'édition de 1872 proposait une description des villes canadiennes, celui de 1873 l'histoire de la colonisation et des ressources, des articles sur les formes de gouvernement et les institutions publiques, et celui à venir (1874?) présenterait les manufactures, les industries, et les inventions du pays. Puisque le seul numéro que nous avons retrouvé (jusqu'à maintenant) comprenait plusieurs illustrations inédites, nous avons décidé de l'indexer dans cet inventaire.

Architecture in Canadian Illustrated News and L'Opinion publique

Although neither of these magazines was an art or architecture journal, both contained enough useful information for architectural research to justify the compilation of an inventory.

The two periodicals were primarily illustrated magazines whose aim was to show the country's arts and progress. Presenting illustrations and descriptions of already existing buildings and, above all, of new constructions was very much in line with this objective, by underlining the skill of our Canadian architects and builders. Moreover, articles on important events and advertisements were often illustrated. Among the illustrations listed, there are many pictures which were not primarily designed to show the architecture. Thus, most of the interiors of buildings are shown because of some event that is being described.

The contents of the articles on architecture vary considerably: a short history or a few details concerning a building, a detailed description, an in-depth analysis. There is often confusion regarding the style of buildings and the technical vocabulary used since the journalists or collaborators were not architectural specialists. The architectural historian may nonetheless find much useful information in these two magazines: the names of the owners, architects, masons, painters, glaziers and persons exercising other trades in the building sector, addresses, descriptions of districts or villages, accounts of fires or renovations, contemporary impressions regarding the architecture. The illustrations, however, remain the most important contribution. The pictures to be found in these two papers, of buildings now no longer in existence, are often the only ones available for research.

Illustrations primarily intended to show a building are usually of good quality (some are even very fine) and enable the details to be appreciated. The illustrations indirectly showing architectural structures (accounts of events, advertisements) are sometimes less precise but the researcher, generally speaking, will not be disappointed in the quality of the engravings.

L'architecture dans le Canadian Illustrated News et L'Opinion publique

Bien qu'aucune de ces revues ne soit une revue d'art ou d'architecture, toutes deux contenaient assez de données utiles à la recherche en architecture pour justifier un inventaire.

Les deux périodiques étaient d'abord des magazines illustrés et s'étaient donnés comme objectif de montrer les arts et le progrès du pays. Présenter des illustrations et des descriptions d'édifices déjà existants et surtout de nouvelles constructions cadrait bien avec cet objectif en mettant en valeur les capacités de nos architectes et constructeurs canadiens. De plus, les reportages sur les événements importants et les annonces étaient souvent illustrés. On retrouvera donc parmi les illustrations indexées plusieurs images dont le but premier n'était pas de montrer l'architecture. Ainsi, la plupart des intérieurs d'édifices sont représentés à l'occasion d'un événement dont on fait la narration.

Le contenu des articles sur l'architecture varie beaucoup: bref historique ou quelques détails concernant l'édifice, description détaillée, analyse élaborée. Il y a souvent de la confusion au niveau du style des édifices et du vocabulaire technique employé puisque les journalistes ou les collaborateurs n'étaient pas des spécialistes en architecture. Les ressources que l'historien d'architecture peut néanmoins tirer de ces deux magazines sont nombreuses: noms de propriétaires, d'architectes, de maçons, de peintres, de vitriers et de personnes exerçant d'autres métiers connexes, adresses, descriptions de quartiers ou de villages, comptes rendus d'incendie ou de rénovations, témoignages des contemporains sur l'architecture. Cependant l'apport le plus important demeure les illustrations. Les représentations d'édifices maintenant disparus qu'on trouve dans ces deux journaux sont parfois les seules dont on dispose pour la recherche.

Les illustrations visant d'abord à montrer un bâtiment sont généralement de bonne qualité (quelques-unes sont même très belles) et permettent d'apprécier les détails. Celles qui montrent des structures architecturales de façon indirecte (narration d'événements,

In 1878-1879, the Canadian Illustrated News published a series of articles entitled "The Cities and Towns of Canada Illustrated." The author traces the history of the town in question, explains its principal commercial and industrial activities, lists its most important public and religious buildings and private residences; moreover, it often describes these buildings in detail or gives their history. The towns and villages are as follows: Valleyfield, Cornwall, Morrisburg, Iroquois, Edwardsburg, Prescott, Spencerville, Kemptville, Aylmer, Portage-du-Fort, Pembroke, Mattawa and Arnprior. This abundantly illustrated series of articles gives a comprehensive view of the architecture of an area, all these towns being situated in western Quebec and eastern Ontario, near the Ottawa River or the St-Lawrence.

The city most often represented is certainly Montreal with 28% of the entries, 353 in number, while Quebec City has 135 (10.7%), Toronto 119 (9.5%) and Ottawa 79 (6.2%).

As regards the number of places shown (not counting the number of entries), the provinces of Ontario and Quebec share first place with about 90 places represented. The North-West Territories, Nova Scotia and Manitoba follow with a dozen places each and less than ten places each are mentioned in the inventory for the other provinces.

As far as styles are concerned, although we have not compiled any statistics, it is certainly the Second Empire style that is the most frequent. Indeed, the years during which these two magazines were published (1869-1883) was a flourishing time for the building of public buildings both federal and provincial and these were very often depicted in the Canadian Illustrated News and L'Opinion publique. The authors of the study Second Empire Style in Canadian Architecture explain that the style adopted by the Canadian government after Confederation was to be Second Empire and conclude: "The early buildings of the new Canadian government drew without exception on Second Empire prototypes."[1] This style was also favoured by provincial and municipal governments. Many of the buildings mentioned in the Cameron and Wright study, moreover, are mentioned in the Canadian Illustrated News and L'Opinion publique. The authors of this study even En 1878-1879, le Canadian Illustrated News a publié une série d'articles intitulés: "The Cities and Towns of Canada Illustrated". L'auteur raconte l'histoire de la ville concernée, explique quelles sont les principales activités commerciales et industrielles, dresse une liste des principaux édifices publics et religieux et des résidences privées; de plus, il décrit souvent ces bâtiments de façon détaillée ou en donne un historique. Les villes et villages présentés sont: Valleyfield, Cornwall, Morrisburg, Iroquois, Edwardsburg, Prescott, Spencerville, Kemptville, Aylmer, Portage-du-Fort, Pembroke, Mattawa et Arnprior. Cette série d'articles abondamment illustrés fournit une bonne vue d'ensemble de l'architecture d'une région, toutes ces localités étant situées dans l'ouest du Québec et l'est de l'Ontario, près de la rivière des Outaouais ou du fleuve Saint-Laurent.

La ville la plus représentée est certes Montréal avec 353 mentions (28 %), tandis que Québec en a 135 (10,7 %), Toronto 119 (9,5 %) et Ottawa 79 (6,2 %).

En nombre de lieux représentés, sans tenir compte de la fréquence des mentions, les provinces d'Ontario et de Québec se partagent la première place avec environ 90 lieux représentés. Les Territoires du Nord-Ouest, la Nouvelle-Écosse et le Manitoba suivent avec une douzaine de lieux et les autres provinces ont moins de dix lieux mentionnés dans l'inventaire.

Au niveau des styles, bien que nous n'ayons pas établi de statistiques, c'est sûrement le style second Empire qui est le plus présent. En effet, les années de parution (1869-1883) correspondent à des années florissantes pour la construction d'édifices publics tant fédéraux que provinciaux, et ceux-ci sont très souvent représentés dans les deux revues. Or, les auteurs de l'étude Le style second Empire dans l'architecture canadienne expliquent que le style adopté par le gouvernement canadien après la Confédération sera le second Empire et concluent: "Les édifices construits par le nouveau gouvernement canadien sont, sans exception, de style second Empire"[1]. Ce style avait aussi la faveur des gouvernements provinciaux et municipaux. Une bonne proportion des édifices mentionnés dans l'étude de believe that this mass depiction of Second Empire style in these magazines circulated to a fashion-conscious clientèle may have contributed to the spread of the Second Empire style in domestic architecture.[2]

The following statistics will give some idea of the type of buildings featured in Canadian Illustrated News and L'Opinion publique. The categories are determined by the function of the building and the statistics are based on the general index, each mention in the index corresponding to one unit.

Category	No. of units
Commercial (offices, banks, stores, hotels, restaurants, markets, etc.)	498
Religious	318
Industrial (all categories)	220
Residential	213
Government (all levels)	195
Educational	177
Leisure (recreation and sports)	87
Military	78
Transport (Lighthouses, railway stations, waterway installations)	69
Miscellaneous (fair and exhibition buildings, arches, terraces, fountains, ruins, etc.)	60
Medical	37
Monuments	27

Cameron et Wright sont d'ailleurs illustrés dans les deux revues inventoriées ici. Les auteurs de cette étude croient même que cette représentation massive du style second Empire dans ces revues diffusées auprès d'une clientèle sensibilisée à la mode, ait pu contribuer à répandre ce style dans l'architecture domestique[2].

Les statistiques suivantes donneront une idée du genre de bâtiments dont il est question dans le Canadian Illustrated News et L'Opinion publique. Les catégories sont établies à partir de l'usage du bâtiment et les statistiques sont basées sur l'index général, chaque mention dans l'index étant comptée.

Catégorie	Mentions
Commerce (bureaux, banques, magasins, hotels, restaurants, marchés, etc.)	498
